GRACENOTES

Summer

School is out for most. Summer is experienced. I am so glad there were no year-round schools when I grew up. Summer was vital for the health of my psyche. There needs to be a different schedule, a varied timing. I would not survive an endless summer I suppose. I would become slothful and disorganized. But for the time of recreation I need the qualities of unbudgeted time and disorganization.

Baseball for me was a summer activity. O I never played even organized little league. One summer we lived in a rent house in Quitman, Texas. I loved it. I got an aluminum bat for my twelfth birthday. Instantly I was the hit of the sandlot. I enjoyed the freedom of, "Hey! Meet me at the field and we can hit a few before supper." Bicycles were ridden. Little sisters were disdained. The guys were going to play ball. That was summer. Unscheduled, unorganized time.

God invites us to rest in Him. He urges us to lose ourselves trying to plumb the depths of His love. He challenges us to explore the limits of His grace. He longs for us to share the concept of His lovingkindness. These concepts take some unscheduled time to process. They do not come in rigid organizational structures.

Sometimes I need a spiritual summer so I can experience things outside my normal rut. I need to be challenged to meet God in the field and play a little spiritual exploration exercise.
